World-Recovery Sure If GermanyDoesNotDefault

The start of real world-recovery is seen by many in Germany's eleventh-hour acceptance the terms imposed by the Allied Reparations Commission — unless Germany defaults in her agreement. By this submission-delayed until the shadow of French invasion lay black across the Ruhr valley—"a tremendous menace is lifted from the world," declares the New York Herald, which bids the nations rejoice "at the new prospect of peace, tranquillity and stability." A Paris dispatch quotes Thomas W. Lamont, the American banker who, during the Treaty negotiations, was financial advisor to the United States Government, as saying that German acceptance of the reparation program means "salvation for Germany, and a new era for the rest of Europe;" and the New York Daily News admonishes us that "this is an excellent time for the people of the United States of America to stop worrying and go back to work.

The leading article in THE LITERARY DIGEST this week presents American public opinion upon the effect that Germany's surrender will have upon the peace and future prosperity of the world. It also shows the total amount Germany must pay to the Allied nations, how it is to be paid, and how it is to be divided.
